CHAIWALA

The word punch is a loanword from sanskrit पंच (pañc), meaning "five", as the drink was originally made with five ingredients: alcohol, sugar, lemon, water, and tea or spices. The drink was brought to England from India by sailors and employees of the British East India company in the early 17th century. From there it was introduced into other european countries. When served communally, the drink is expected to be of a lower alcohol content than a typical cocktail.

GIN and TONICS

This cocktail was introduced by the army of the British East India company where malaria was a persistent problem. In the 1700s Scottish doctor George Cleghorn discovered that quinine could be used to prevent and treat the disease. The quinine was drunk in tonic water, however the bitter taste was unpleasant. In the early 19th century British officers took to adding a mixture of water, sugar, lime and gin to make the drink more palatable, thus gin and tonic was born.
